Everything starts from here...

Chantry Well has its roots in English aristocratic heritage. It was 1872 in Morpeth, a town on the border between England and Scotland, when George Young acquired a mineral water factory. The factory was located inside an ancient abbey dating back to the Middle Ages, now used as a bagpipe museum.

A long journey to date

The Origins

Our story began with a small English family business that produced artisanal drinks using local ingredients. Their passion for quality and respect for tradition inspired the creation of Chantry Well.

Presence in Italy

Today Chantry Well is an Italian company that carries on the English tradition of quality and craftsmanship. Our products are made with care and passion, offering a unique sensory experience.

The drinks of that time

The recipes of the time were written on parchment and date back to 1872.

Like a precious treasure of inestimable value, they have been jealously guarded by George Young's granddaughter and have been handed down from generation to generation to this day.

Originally, the bottles were made of terracotta, then they moved on to Codd type glass, a bottle made specifically for carbonated drinks using the principle of the ball valve.

The coordinated image and the logo in particular have been tried to keep them as realistic as possible to the original ones: the name George Young has been eliminated due to a problem of trade marks, but they have wanted to keep the initials "GY" and the full name on the collar, to continue to make this important legacy "live over time".

Even as far as the recipes are concerned, an attempt has been made to faithfully reproduce those of the time, making only a few adjustments in the quantities of ingredients to make them compliant with the law and therefore marketable.
